Dear Mr. Weilgart,

Thank you for demonstrating your invention called the "Dictionary Index". I found it to be inspiring that you obtained the patent on your own and to see your enthusiasm for the possibilities of such an enhancement to the current dictionary look-up process.

I found the Dictionary Index to be simple to understand and when I tried it myself it truly saved me time in locating words. It seems logical that if words are easier to find people will take the time to look up words more often and will increase their understanding of what they read and hear.

As the Employee Development Specialist I am responsible for acquiring books and other educational resources to encourage life long learning. I would certainly consider purchasing a dictionary with such an enhancement.

Please accept my sincere wishes for success at getting your invention to market.

Sincerely,
